

First, I appreciate the FCC making it convenient for me to comment on telemarketers. Eventhough I tell the telemarketers who call to take me off their call list and never call me again, I continue to get telemarketing calls, at a rate of several telemarketing calls a day. There should be a national do-not-call list that EVERY telemarketer must respect, even if they are calling for a non-profit or political campaign. The calls have been especially bad during this election season averaging about 6 per day. I view telemarketing calls as an invasion of my privacy and they tie up a phone line that I pay for. Bottom line is that they waste my time and money and are usually rude as well.

John Gipson
Huntsville, AL